Unrest in Egypt, Yemen

U.S. embassies attacked in wake of Libya diplomat murder, controversial film

Reuters

SANAA/CAIRO Demonstrators attacked the U.S. embassies in Yemen and Egypt on Thursday in protest of a film mocking Islam, and American warships headed toward Libya after the U.S. ambassador there was killed in related violence this week.

In Libya, authorities said they had made four arrests in the investigation into the attack that killed ambassador Christopher Stevens and three other Americans in Benghazi on Tuesday.

President Obama has vowed to bring to justice those responsible for the Benghazi attack, which U.S. officials said may have been planned in advance.

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said Washington had nothing to do with the crudely made film posted on the Internet, which she called "disgusting and reprehensible."

The amateurish production, entitled the "Innocence of Muslims," portrays Mohammad as a womanizer and a child abuser.

For many Muslims, any depiction of the Prophet is blasphemous and caricatures or other characterizations have in the past provoked violent protests across the Muslim world.

Demonstrations spread further Thursday, with U.S. embassies again the targets of popular anger among Muslims questioning why the U.S. has failed to take action against the makers of the film.

Hundreds of Yemenis broke through the main gate of the heavily fortified U.S. embassy compound in the capital Sanaa, shouting "We sacrifice ourselves for you, Messenger of God." They smashed windows of security offices outside the embassy and burned cars.

A security source said at least 15 people were wounded, some by gunfire, before the government ringed the area with troops.

“WE SACRIFICE OURSELVES FOR YOU, MESSENGER OF GOD.”

—What hundreds of Yemenis shouted as they broke through the main gate of the heavily fortified U.S. embassy compound in the capital, Sanna.

In Egypt, protesters hurled stones at a police cordon around the U.S. embassy in central Cairo after climbing into the embassy compound and tearing down the American flag. The state news agency said 13 people were hurt in violence which erupted late Wednesday, following initial protests Tuesday.

Wrinkle in identity of filmmaker

CNN

At the heart of the mystery surrounding a film that has sparked worldwide protest was the filmmaker himself, a man identified in the casting call as Sam Bassiel, on the call sheet as Sam Basil and reported at first by news outlets as Sam Bacile.

But federal officials consider that man to be Nakoula Basseley Nakoula, who was convicted in 2009 of bank fraud.

The FBI contacted the filmmaker because of the potential for threats, a federal law enforcement official told CNN on Thursday. But he is not under investigation.

With media parked at his residence in Cerritos, Calif., Nakoula called the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department Wednesday night to report a disturbance, said spokesman Steve Whitmore. He wanted local police to protect him.

When news of his movie first broke, the filmmaker identified himself as Sam Bacile and told the Wall Street Journal that he was a 52-year-old Israeli-American real estate developer from California. He said Jewish donors had financed his film.

But Israel's Foreign Ministry said there was no record of a Sam Bacile with Israeli citizenship.

"This guy is totally anonymous. At this point, no one can confirm he holds Israeli citizenship, and even if he did, we are not involved," ministry spokesman Yigal Palmor said.

A search by CNN of public records related to Bacile came up empty. A search of entertainment records turned up no previous mention of a Sam Bacile, and the directors and writers guilds had no listing for him.

I have painstakingly crafted Pinterest boards to decorate imaginary houses, fill make-believe closets and plan fictional vacations. I have stacks of well-intentioned exercises that are supposed to give me Wonder Woman's butt and bottomless recipe boxes full of meals I've never attempted.

ran out to get more Mod Podge, a stranger with tears in her eyes promised to pray for my health. Also: My bathtub is ruined.

DAY 14: Attempted "nail art" today. The less said, the better.

DAY 15: My hands are dyed navy blue to the wrist after I tried to re-create some ombre curtains that Anthropologie came out with last year.

DAY 17: My Pomeranian is furious with me after I made her wear the crooked pillowcase dress that Pinner Susie McGlone promised would be easy to make. Susie lied.

DAY 19: The welts from the glue-gun burn I suffered making festive garland out of paper plates and ribbons have almost healed. The Pomeranian bites have not.

DAY 20: More crafts are appearing on my pin-board, but I don't remember pinning them. Odd.

DAY 22: Crafted a bento box lunch re-creating "Washington Crossing the Delaware." The blue rice of the icy river is bleeding into the bright white powdered wigs (carved out of fresh mozzarella). Must take a picture and post it to Facebook before the entire thing is a wash.

DAY 22 (LATER): Response on Facebook was minimal. Got only two likes and one comment reading: "Katie, are you OK? Have you been out of your house this week?"

DAY 24: Blew my nose today and only glitter came out. What is happening to me?

DAY 26: Deleted all my pins, all of my boards. Everything. I'm feeling much better now. Need to get a new hobby.

DAY 27: Decided to take up origami. It seems much more soothing than crafting. Plus, I found a whole bunch of easy instructions on Pinterest. Named my new board "You Gotta Know When to Fold 'Em."

Like pretty much every other Pinterest user out there, I've lost hours to the mental masturbation that is Pinterest. Well, it's time I stop pin-crazinating and start doing! (Cue "Eye of the Tiger.") I decided to try a new craft project from my DIY board every day for a month. I recorded my progress below. Some details may be greatly exaggerated.

DAY 1: Success! Spray-painted a bunch of pine cones silver and stuck them in a glass jar. A confused silver spider wandered out but other than that, this was a win. One pin down.

DAY 3: Got off to a slow start today after I spent two hours Googling Prince Harry's naked pictures. Procrastination will not beat me!

DAY 10: Didn't leave the house today. It all started when I attempted to create a waterfall braid that must take at least five volunteers and four hours to accomplish (or maybe three people and two hours if they all are structural engineers). Chalking this one up to failure, but I still consider it a bit of a win since I've decided those complicated braids make you look like you're in a cult. Perhaps waterfall braids are easier to do if you have access to sister-wives.

DAY 12: Made self-tanner suggested by FunMom82 out of black tea and lotion. The results were, at best, splotchy. Later, when I

No deal is done, but both sides say the end is in sight for teachers strike

Chicago Tribune

Chicago Public Schools and the teachers union began the day saying they were close to a deal that could return teachers and students to the classroom Monday, but gave little information subsequently as negotiations to iron out details extended well into Thursday evening.

CHICAGO

DAY

The union's House of Delegates is scheduled to meet at 2 p.m. Friday to discuss the district's latest proposals. The delegates' approval is needed to end the strike and put teachers back on the job, but the union was not saying whether the body will vote at Friday's meeting.

The union is inviting other labor organizations to join it at a rally at noon Saturday at Union Park on the Near West Side, which could be a final show of force and solidarity before the walkout ends.

If a tentative deal is reached and delegates vote before the end of the weekend to call off the strike, a contract still would need to be ratified by the union's full 25,000 members, likely in the next two weeks.

Before talks started Thursday in the Chicago Hilton and Towers on South Michigan Avenue, Chicago Teachers Union President Karen Lewis, who has consistently downplayed progress at the negotiating table, rated her confidence "a 9" on a scale on 1-10.

Her confidence buoyed teachers, but as with parents, the optimism of many educators was tempered with caution.

"We're most optimistic that the union leadership will make sure our demands are met," said Michelle Gunderson, a fourth-grade teacher at Nettelhorst Elementary School in Lakeview. "We can't just do this again. This has to be the finish line."

With the union saying early on its members wouldn't be returning to school this week, the city's first teachers strike in 25 years moved into its fifth day Friday. Some 350,000 students who remain out of the classroom and will have to make up the loss of a week at some point during the school year.

Under the deal put on the table by CPS Tuesday, teachers would receive on average a 16 percent raise over the next four years. That figure includes both cost-of-living salary bumps and the so-called step increases for working another year in the district.

The district and union continue to haggle over how teachers will be evaluated and a framework for recalling teachers who have been laid off because of school closings, consolidations and turnarounds.

Job security has emerged as a critical issue during contract talks as CPS considers closing sparsely enrolled and under-performing public schools to cut costs and conserve resources. Union leaders worry about the jobs that could be lost during such a dramatic downsizing.

Stay-at-home mom Elsa Shalaveyus, 41, stood beside teachers on the picket line at Walt Disney Magnet School in Uptown, advocating for smaller class sizes and better classroom conditions. Even though the union has her support, she's hopeful her two sons will be back in their desks come Monday.

"It would be great if it happens soon," she said. "They had just gone back to school and were already getting back to the routine of getting up early. Now we have to do that all over again."

Pull up a chair—it's always tea time for Billy Corgan

Chicago Tribune

Billy Corgan of Smashing Pumpkins opened his tea shop, Madame Zuzu's, to a full house Thursday morning as both fans and Highland Park neighbors sampled teas from around the world as soft music played and Corgan worked the room.

Dressed in jeans, a striped T-shirt and khaki sweater, Corgan chatted with customers, receiving gifts and well wishes for his 1930s-inspired shop that seats about 30 in what was once a small post office at 582 Roger Williams Ave.

Corgan, who has owned the David Adler-designed house in Highland Park for eight years, said he hopes Madame Zuzu's will inspire people of all ages to meet for tea, performance art, music and conversation.

"I wanted something better than a place you just sit on your laptop," Corgan said, "where like-minded people can discuss ideas and performance art. The tea is the excuse."

Linda Iovino, who lives in Highland Park and works nearby, stopped in to give Corgan a pepper plant.

16 arrests in probe of drug ring

Chicago Tribune

Federal and local officers arrested 16 people this week as part of a two-year investigation into drug-trafficking rings associated with the Latin Kings street gang.

One ring, led by Damian Rivera, 31, of Burbank, distributed or tried to distribute more than 12 pounds of heroin, collecting more than $171,000 in drug proceeds between March and June, prosecutors alleged in court documents this week.

Nine people, including Rivera, were arrested in that investigation this week, two remain fugitives, and one was already in custody, according to a release from the U.S. attorney's office.

The second ring, led by Alan "Ghost" Cisneros, 27, of Summit—who prosecutors say was the Midwest leader of the Almighty Latin King Nation until his May arrest—distributed cocaine in the Chicago area, according to court documents. Seven people charged in the Cisneros-led ring were arrested this week, prosecutors and a spokesman for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives said Thursday.

Talk to the hand

4 SAN FRANCISCO Passwords for online banking, social networks and email could be replaced with the wave of a hand if prototype technology developed by Intel makes it to tablets and laptops.

Aiming to do away with the need to remember passwords for growing numbers of online services, Intel researchers have put together a tablet with new software and a biometric sensor that recognizes the unique patterns of veins on a person's palm.

"The problem with passwords—we use too many of them, their rules are complex and they differ for different websites," Sridhar Iyengar, director of security research at Intel Labs, said at the annual Intel Developer Forum in San Francisco on Thursday. "There is a way out of it, and biometrics is an option."

Iyengar demonstrated the technology, quickly waving his hand in front of a tablet but not touching it. Once the tablet recognizes a user, it can securely communicate that person's identity to banks, social networks and other services where the person has accounts, he said.

Making laptops, tablets and smartphones responsible for identifying users would take that requirement away from individual websites and do away with the need to individually enter passwords into each of them, Iyengar said.

"We plan to work with service providers to take full advantage of this," he said.

A device using the technology would use built-in accelerometers to detect when a user puts it down, and then would log its owner off to keep unauthorized people from getting in.

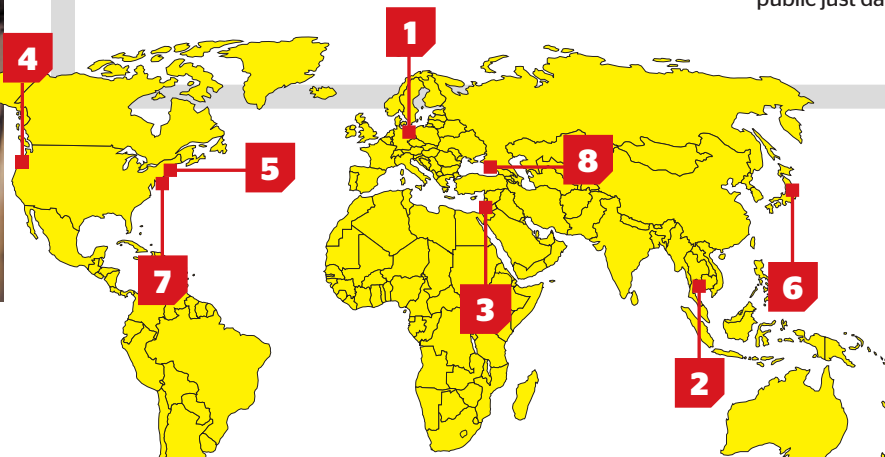

The palm-identification technology was one of several demonstrations during a keynote address by Intel Chief Technology Officer Justin Rattner at the forum. Rattner runs Intel Labs, which focuses on identifying and solving future technology problems.

MODERN INTELLIGENCE FOR A MEAN ECONOMY

FIND NEW WAYS TO SAVE

GETTY IMAGES

YOUNG MONEY

Megan Crepeau

redeye@tribune.com

There's savings, and then there's savings. Traditional savings accounts are just fine, of course. But there are a few reasons you might want to step it up.

Maybe you've got money coming out your eyeballs and you just need a place to put it (way to go, fancy pants). Or maybe it's too tempting to pinch money from your savings to buy, say, vodka, and you need to put it where you can't get at it. That's OK, too. Either way, here's Savings 201.

CDs: Not the music kind

When you buy a certificate of deposit, you put that money where it won't see the light of day for a year. Or six months, or five years, or however long the certificate is good for. Your money goes to the bank, you try to forget it exists, and then when the CD reaches "maturity," you take it back—along with the (hopefully sizable) chunk of interest it accrued. Some CDs even let you withdraw the interest as it accrues, instead of all at once. And you won't be tempted to spend, because there are usually hardcore penalties for taking your money out before maturity.

MMA: Not the wrestling kind

Money market accounts can be the best of both worlds. The interest rate is higher than your average savings account, and you can actually use the money—some MMAs even issue you a debit card. However, there are strict limits on how many withdrawals you can make per month, which should curb any impulse spending. (You also can start MMAs that put your money into investments, but that's another column for another time, because the stock market is scary.)

Bonds: Yes, the grandma kind

This isn't a savings account so much as a sort of loan to the government. I'm including them because they're still great ways to save, and they're so very easy. You can buy them in just about any amount, they'll accrue interest for you, and you can get your money back any time after a year. Now you see why Grandma likes them so much. To buy directly from the feds, go to treasurydirect.gov.

Got some skeletons in your closet?

Los Angeles Times

If you're applying for a corporate job, there's a good chance your potential employer will run a background check on you. Here are tips for how to prepare:

1. Credit reports

As early in the process as possible, get copies of your credit reports from the three major agencies. Look for errors or charges you dispute, and then contact the credit bureau or creditors to get matters resolved before your prospective employer sees the charges.

2. Do it yourself

Search for yourself online. Clean up your Facebook page and other social networking sites to remove items that may not reflect well on you. If there are unflattering references elsewhere, contact the website owners to request that they be removed.

3. Alert friends and associates

If you think your prospective employer may be contacting people you know, give them a heads up. "This helps avoid suspicion and alerts you to possible problems," said the Privacy Rights Clearinghouse, a non-profit information and advocacy group in San Diego.

4. Pay for your own check

If you're wondering what a background check might unearth, pay a professional to have one done on you. There are numerous companies that do the checks. If you can, get a recommendation from a corporate executive whose firm has had a good experience with a background checker.

BAD DEAL

BEARS' STOCK DROPS WITH THURSDAY-NIGHT LOSS TO PACKERS

| NFC NORTH | W | L | GB |
|-----------|---|---|-----|
| Detroit | 1 | 0 | — |
| Minnesota | 1 | 0 | — |
| BEARS | 1 | 1 | 1/2 |
| Green Bay | 1 | 1 | 1/2 |

If there's one thing the Bears and Packers are known for, it's commercials. OK, we can't write that with a straight face. But we do get a kick out of Brian Urlacher snapping remotes for Xfinity, or even Aaron Rodgers making fun of himself for State Farm. On the field, the new-look Bears still have some work to do before fans are convinced they can hang with the mighty Packers. Here's how Thursday's game at Green Bay unfolded according to the moments that made us buy in—or not. REDEYE

CHRIS SWEDA/TRIBUNE

1ST QTR.

+ We're in (7:49)

Tim Jennings, who was stellar in Week 1, prevents Jordy Nelson from making a first-down catch. That's a good sign.

- Not sold (13:37)

OK, that's two games in a row Cutler has been sacked on the Bears' first play from scrimmage. Haven't we been over this?

+ We're in (8:45)

Shea McClellin (left), Corey Wootton (center) and Lance Briggs sack Aaron Rodgers, essentially killing a Packers drive in Bears territory. So THAT'S why he needs insurance.

- Not sold (7:06)

Jay Cutler appears to chew out his offensive line for causing a delay of game penalty, and the Bears end up punting one play later.

- Not sold (5:19)

Rodgers appears to find Nelson for a huge gain, but Nelson drops it. We'll take it, but they can't get lucky all night. Can they?

+ We're in (5:13)

The very next play, Julius Peppers smothers Rodgers for another sack on third down. Boom.

- Not sold (4:26)

Cutler's eating turf again as he's sacked by Clay Matthews. The offense looks pretty inept right now.

- Not sold

Cedric Benson—yes, THAT Cedric Benson—is doing the lion's share of the damage against the Bears defense, compiling 64 total yards. No excuses for this guy beating you, Bears.

SCORE:
BEARS 0, PACKERS 0

THE STARTING LINE

■ White Sox at Minnesota, 7:10 p.m. CSN ■ Cubs vs. Pittsburgh, 1:20 p.m. WGN ■ NHL commissioner: Owners support lockout if no labor deal set by Saturday

2ND QTR.

Not sold (14:48)

Bears get caught with 12 men on the field, and the resulting penalty gives Green Bay a first down. It wasn't THAT loud at Lambeau, Bears.

Not sold (9:42)

Gabe Carimi gets in a shoving match with Packers linebacker A.J. Hawk, but the Bears lineman is the only one hit with a personal foul penalty. Sigh. Keep your hands to yourself, Gabe.

Not sold (9:08)

Cutler (center) appears to have time but gets sacked by Matthews again, setting up third-and-32. We repeat: third-and-32. It's a miracle he didn't fumble.

Not sold (3:17)

Randall Cobb runs through a HUGE hole for 28 yards to get the Packers in the red zone. Why can't the Bears do that with Devin Hester?

+ We're in (2:33)

Is Rodgers wearing a Bears jersey now? Oh wait, he's just wearing Peppers, who racks up another sack.

+ We're in (2:00)

It's Henry Melton's turn to put Rodgers on the ground. Props to the Bears' coverage on this one.

Not sold (1:56)

Tom Crabtree takes a short pass on a fake field goal and goes untouched into the end zone? You've got to be kidding.

Not sold (1:07)

Bad Jay shows up again, throwing an interception to Tramon Williams. At this point, Cutler still has not thrown Brandon Marshall's way, which explains the steam coming out of our ears.

SCORE:
PACKERS 13, BEARS 0

3RD QTR.

Not sold (3:18)

Cutler is picked off AGAIN, this time by Charles Woodson (above). Jay's looking very Caleb Hanie-esque.

+ We're in (13:47)

Cutler finds Matt Forte for 15 yards and a first down. They could be on to something here...

Not sold (8:59)

There's Brandon Marshall for an easy TD! Except he drops it. And here we thought that was the Old Brandon. At least the Bears get a field goal out of the drive.

+ We're in (7:38)

Brian Urlacher shoves a Packers blocker into Benson on third-and-short, forcing a Green Bay punt.

+ We're in (0:53)

Classic Charles Tillman: The hobbled cornerback strips the ball from Jermichael Finley and recovers the fumble. Now life! Too bad the Bears go three-and-out on the next drive. Sigh.

SCORE:
PACKERS 13, BEARS 3

4TH QTR.

+ We're in (11:49)

Benson is stuffed on third-and-1, and the Packers settle for a field goal. Silver linings, people, silver linings.

Not sold (11:37)

Cutler throws to Marshall in double coverage, and Williams picks it off again. Gee, didn't see THAT coming.

Not sold (11:22)

Well that was fast. Rodgers pounces on the Bears mistake, finding Donald Driver for a 26-yard touchdown. That'll pretty much do it...

+ We're in

Or will it? Jennings picks off Rodgers and a few plays later, Cutler finds Kellen Davis for a TD.

Not sold

Well, so much for that. Cutler still hasn't won in Lambeau as the Bears' starting quarterback. Better luck next year, we guess.

Not used to these Bears? Give it time

SACKED AGAIN

Bag Boy

» redevsports
@tribune.com

There's good, there's exciting, and then there's a "religious experience."

Say hello to the new Bears offense (cue angels singing and clouds parting).

The only thing I can think of is Jerry Angelo, sitting at home, watching the games and screaming "My God, I didn't know the Bears could do that!"

They can and they do, thanks to some modern thinking and some major upgrades.

Sadly, I think of Johnny Knox. Yes, hard to believe, I think he and Devin Hester were actually starters last year. All I can say is, Johnny: Take your time, don't hurry back. My man, we got this.

A quick word to Bears fans: Go easy on yourselves. Many are picking on you for not knowing how to behave when the Bears are in the red zone. It's OK! This stuff will come! I'm just learning this, too! We'll figure it out!

To review: New Bears: Get in the red zone, throw it to a big, beefy wideout (take your pick) and score a touchdown! (Currently valued at six points).

Old Bears: Get in red zone, run off tackle twice, take a timeout, talk it over, and punt it. Defense and special teams, man!

So strange to be a part of the modern NFL. Feels like someone finally let us sit at the adults table. There are teams who have been playing with toys like these for years. Now, we get to.

Also, Evan Rodriguez. Hey, he's a "full-back," and apparently they still exist. Haven't had one this good since Matt Suhey. Nice blocking to spring Matt Forte.

Man, did we really have Marion Barber and Roy Williams and Caleb Hanie on this team last year? Wasn't it a bad dream?

Here's another bad dream: The White Sox, limping to the finish. Movie metaphor time: World War II. B-17 bomber coming in all shot up. Robin Ventura is the pilot. Everyone on the ground, no one knows if they'll survive the landing.

Matt Forte

That's the Sox going into the last weekend at Tampa Bay. Stay tuned for the landing. Ambulances are standing by.

Speed thrills—just not in Chicago

By Ryan Smith

FOR REDEYE

The biggest star of America's second-most watched sport took a very public stroll around Millennium Park this week, yet no one seemed to notice.

"I went to the Bean and no one said a word," said Dale Earnhardt Jr., nine-time winner of NASCAR's Most Popular Driver award. "Anytime you go to a city like Chicago, you can kind of blend right in."

Fellow driver Kasey Kahne also noted his relative anonymity in the city.

"Once you get out of the city, you see a lot of fans in this area," he said. "But here? You're not going to run into a lot of race fans. You just don't."

There's plenty of evidence that racing doesn't rev the engines of most city dwellers. However, the motorsports giant has fueled up this week for its biggest push to date into the hearts of Chicagoans.

Instead of holding the kickoff race for the Chase for the Sprint Cup—NASCAR's version of playoffs—in New Hampshire, officials in 2011 moved it to Chicagoland Speedway's Geico 400 in Joliet.

TUNE IN

Geico 400 at Chicagoland Speedway

(Race 1 in the Chase for the Sprint Cup)

Noon Sunday, ESPN

"It's important to launch the Chase for the Sprint Cup in a major market and Chicago is a great place for sports fans and race fans," said Lou Garate, senior director of partnership marketing for NASCAR. "We've had some challenges in breaking through in this market, and that's part of why we're doing it here."

As part of that strategy, NASCAR chose the House of Blues in River North—an hour's drive from Joliet—as the location for a sold-out Contenders Live fan event Wednesday that brought together Earnhardt Jr. and the 11 other drivers who qualified for the Chase for a Q&A. Of the estimated 1,200 fans who attended, many hailed from the suburbs or even neighboring states.

But Chicagoland Speedway president Scott Paddock is preaching patience.

"We've only been in this market less than a decade now, so it's going to take some time to build the brand here," he said. "Give us a few years and I think we'll see more appeal."

Though no one would mistake the Second City for Talladega, Chase contender Martin Truex Jr. believes Sunday's race could help change that somewhat.

"If we can put on a big show this week and have a good race, hopefully we can get people pumped up for our sport," he said. "I can't think of a better racetrack or a cooler city to be in."

1 When Jay Cutler says there are "no secrets" between the Bears and Packers, he means ...

... Mr. Rodgers never had a dirty little secret.

... he and Aaron Rodgers hide nothing during pillow talk.

... in the Circle of Trust, all is shared with all. Namaste, my friends.

... he knows if Aaron Rodgers' carpet matches the drapes.

... they've played each other 184 times in the last 90 years. FYI: That's a lot.

2 How early is too early to think about magic numbers in baseball?

Magic number? For the Cubs, it's poof the magic draggin'.

It's always too early if Chris Volstad is in your rotation.

I am not joking: in 2003, I started a Cubs magic number counter on Opening Day.

Never too early for the Cubs. Their magic number is 1908.

If you're the White Sox, Wednesday, Oct. 31, seems about right.

3 With Notre Dame going to the ACC, what's the next big move?

For Notre Dame, to the Toilet Bowl.

Come on, Notre Dame, just pick a damn sorority and stick with it.

Northeastern will switch places with Northwestern for one freaky Friday!

Better question: If Fighting Irish football still shuns conferences, does that make them Loper-chauns?

To beef up its football stature, ND football team joins Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference.

4 Make a prediction for Sunday's Geico 400 at Chicagoland Speedway.

The race will finish early. The suburbs tire easily.

Call me crazy, but I still think Usain Bolt takes it.

The guy who turns right will lose.

The road kill on the track will look a particular shade of green.

The gecko, caveman, money with googly eyes and Rod Serling guy will all be absent.

5 What should the Chase for the Sprint Cup winner receive?

A getaway car from the suburbs.

A date with the lovely Patrick McManus.

"Talladega Nights: The Ballad of Ricky Bobby" on Blu-ray ... the director's cut.

Win a NASCAR race: a glass of milk. Win the Cup: Milka Duno.

Something from Sprint. A new phone! Something from Chase. Free checking!

That's the retail price for the D-Rose 3 shoe, which will be in stores Oct. 4. In case you're wondering, that's WAY cheaper than LeBron James' $270 shoe, the LeBron X.

The Bulls superstar got a little emotional Thursday, through it had nothing to do with the unveiling of his new signature footwear. ABEL URIBE/TRIBUNE

D-Rose (hearts) sit-ups

Bulls guard Derrick Rose said Thursday he started jumping "a couple days ago" and that rehabilitation of his surgically repaired left knee is going well.

"Recovery has been good," Rose said. "I'm rehabbing five times a week. On Tuesday and Thursday, we do lower and upper body and bike workouts. I'm starting to shoot now. I'm starting to jump a little a little while ago, like a couple days ago."

"I'm seeing improvement every week. My leg does get sore sometimes. But I'm able to fight through it. My trainers who are working on me are making sure I'm doing a great job telling them what's going on so they can treat me right."

Rose tore his anterior cruciate ligament during Game 1 of the Bulls' first-round series against Philadelphia on April 28. He underwent surgery May 12. Team physician Brian Cole, who performed the surgery, said Rose would be sidelined eight to 12 months.

"I'm working on my core," Rose said at a promotional appearance for Adidas. "This is the only time in my life where I worked on my core as much as I do now. Sit-ups, so

Star feels parents' pain

With encouraging signs coming out of labor negotiations on the Chicago teachers strike, Derrick Rose passionately weighed in on the topic Thursday.

"I can only imagine what parents have to go through," said Rose, acknowledging publicly for the first time that he is preparing to become a father. "They have to find babysitters. I gotta believe that's hard. ... I'm from here and riding around the neighborhood and seeing kids out at 12 p.m. when they're supposed to be in school, it hurts you."

many exercises that I do just to get my core together. That's a huge part of getting back. Basketball players don't usually have to work on our core like that because we work on our hips and legs."

Rose became emotional onstage when video of his injury was shown on a video board. He spoke in advance of the Oct. 4 launch of his latest shoe model and apparel line and vowed to return better than ever.

Jellyfish

1009 N. Rush St. 312-660-3111

Good for: Scene-loving sushi fans. How many restaurants save room on the menu to credit the music curator (DJ Jesse de la Pena) alongside the chef (Harold Jurado of Chizakaya) and sushi chef (Andy Galsan of Sushi Samba Rio)? A stunning greenhouse-style dining area, ocean-blue lighting overhead and drinks garnished with orchid blooms and slices of starfruit add up to a sophisticated setting for dinner or late-night nibbles. (The kitchen's open until 1:30 a.m.) On the menu: Signature maki ($11-$18) range from creative raw options such as the Black Diamond (two-bite circles of tempura shrimp, Alaskan crab and black caviar) to cooked rolls such as the Torched Salmon (warmed with a blowtorch before it arrives at your table) and the Spicy Tuna Tempura, a deep-fried roll with avocado and cheese. The rest of the menu is filled with pan-Asian dishes ranging from barbecue pork skewers with papaya and kimchi ($8) to a splurge-worthy wagyu ribeye with uni-sriracha hollandaise sauce ($65).

A roll call of four splashy new sushi spots

By Lisa Arnett | REDEYE

Tired of the California roll at your go-to takeout joint and bored with the nigiri your neighborhood BYOB? These sushi spots, all new additions to the dining scene within the last six months, will shake up your routine. Whether you're looking to go all out for a flashy birthday dinner or just sidle up to the sushi bar for a quick meal, these four restaurants offer something for every taste. LMARNETT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEATS

Kai Zan

2557 1/2 Chicago Ave. 773-278-5776

Good for: Solo sushi bar noshing. This Humboldt Park restaurant's quaint booths for two and tables for four by the front window are nice, but seats at the sushi bar have the best view of the fish-slicing, teppanyaki-grilling action. Since this BYOB restaurant is so small, reservations are recommended, even if you're flying solo.

On the menu: Start with grilled skewers of bacon-wrapped enoki mushroom ($3) and move on to signature sushi such as the Green Monster Roll (avocado-wrapped shrimp tempura, $12) or the Orange Rush ($8), salmon-wrapped scallop with a spicy glaze. A handful of delectable daily specials are also offered, so listen up when your server gives the rundown.

TBA

1613 N. Damen Ave. 773-878-8998

Good for: Adventurous groups. If you have a penchant for DIY and an appreciation for mystery, put this now-nameless Bucktown eatery on your to-do list. It's not actually called TBA, but rather the restaurant's name is to be announced: Since opening in late August, restaurant staff has been encouraging diners to suggest ideas for its name through a contest on its website (eatiscoming.com) that ends at 11:59 p.m. Saturday. One winning name will be chosen Sunday and the diner who suggested it will score a $100 gift certificate every month for a year.

On the menu: If you're bored with seeing the same old rolls around town, go for the make-your-own maki option ($8 and up). You choose your own fish, sauce and wrap (seaweed paper, soy paper or cucumber skin) and the sushi chefs will combine them to make a one-of-a-kind creation. Snacks such as tempura-fried cherry tomatoes with gouda-blue cheese dipping sauce ($6) break the mold when it comes to cooked dishes. As for drinks, the restaurant was BYOB in its first weeks after opening, but recently received its liquor license and is stocking up on Japanese beer and sake.

Jellyfish and kelp noodle salad at Masaki

Masaki

990 N. Mies Van Der Rohe Way 312-280-9100

Good for: A special occasion dinner. This elegant sushi parlor inside the Gold Coast's Hilton hotel may be small in size, but the multi-course meals are marvelous in their scale and scope. Cushy banquettes, elegant floral-patterned plates and eye-candy presentations will reward those looking to splurge.

On the menu: Instead of mixing and matching your own sashimi and maki a la carte, choose from three ($98), five ($134) or seven ($178) courses. Single courses often are made up of multiple dishes, so even the three-course dinner has myriad tastes to offer. Dishes might include crab beer-battered with Japanese brew Sapporo, oysters served both raw and fried, kelp noodle salad wrapped with paper-thin slices of cucumbers or ponzu-dressed head-on shrimp with octopus and crab.

5 SPOTS FOR YOUR WEEKEND RADAR

LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE FILE

Tavernita 151 W. Erie St. 312-274-1111

This Spanish-inspired restaurant has expanded its Sunday brunch to Saturday, so you can graze on pork belly bocadillos and smoked salmon hash all weekend long.

Embeya

564 W. Randolph St. 312-612-5640

Chef Thai Dang (formerly of L20) cooks elegant dishes with an Asian accent at this just-opened West Loop restaurant. Think pork belly summer rolls and cuttlefish with jicama and miso.

The Reservoir

844 W. Montrose Ave. 773-275-4000

Uptown's newest bar is all about craft beer, with drafts such as The Lost Abbey Red Barn ale, Metropolitan Krankshaft kolsh and Lagunitas A Little Sumpin' Sumpin' ale at the ready. Flatbreads, salads and shareable plates like mussels and frites are on the menu, and a cocktail list is in the works to debut as early as next week.

Bavette's Bar & Boeuf

218 W. Kinzie St. 312-624-8154

The juicy steaks, potent Old Fashioneds and indulgent seafood towers have plenty of foodies buzzing about this River North restaurant from the same team as nearby Gilt Bar.

Elizabeth

4835 N. Western Ave. 773-681-0651

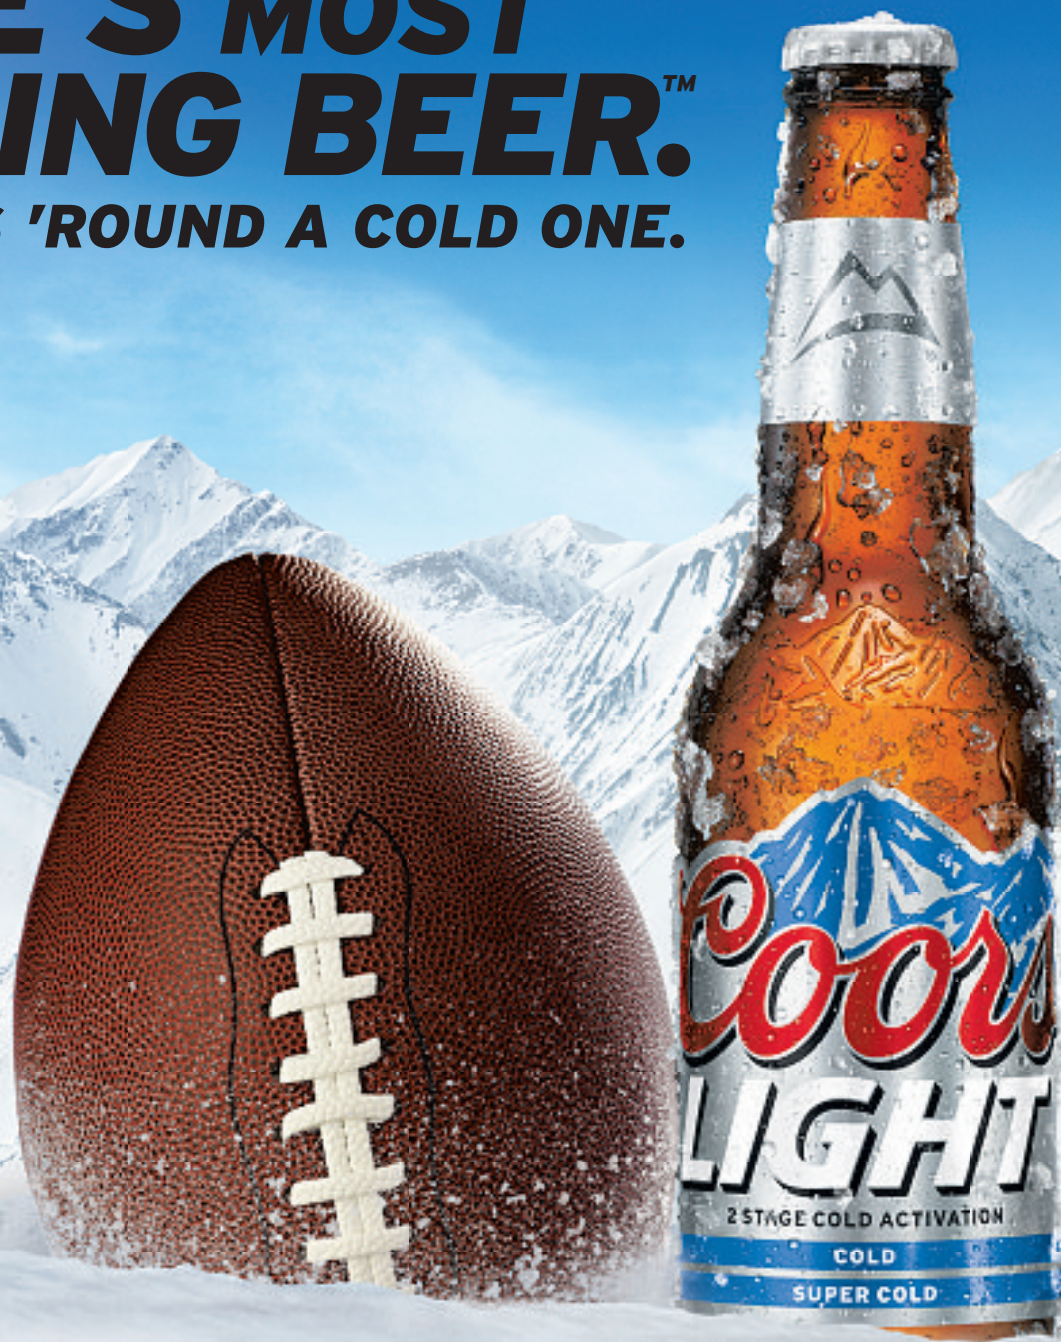

The latest restaurant to follow Next's lead and trade reservations for tickets isn't due to open until next weekend in Lincoln Square, but dinner tickets ($65-$205 depending on the date and number of courses) are on sale now at elizabeth-restaurant.com.

Keeping people in the friend zone

The Date Report

He is handsome. He buys my drinks more than half the time we go out. Occasionally we watch cartoons together while he shines his shoes. He's not my boyfriend; he's just my really close guy friend of nearly eight years. By now, we've had to come up with some pretty creative ways to look uninvolved.

Find an asexual descriptor to use for introductions.

When a guy I'm interested in comes up to say hi, I can't just say, "This is Ian." It's too ambiguous. I decided to start introducing him as my cousin or gay brother, but for some reason he has a problem with that. Something about it not being true. Whatever. So from now on, it's something like "my old college buddy," "my loud-ass neighbor" or "my chess opponent."

Learn a few wingman moves.

My friend is the worst wingman. When we're standing in a group of cute guys that he knows but I don't know, does he introduce us? No. Does he sometimes start talking to the guy I'm flirting with about suits until I'm totally out of the picture? Yes. There's a good time and a bad time to move away from your friend at a bar and a good wingman knows the difference.

Take turns looking unattractive.

This happens accidentally with us sometimes, and it's usually me that looks like a scrub. Glasses on, hair a mess and, I mean, I don't wear sweatpants in public but to do so would really show your commitment to getting your friend laid. If the attractiveness differential is great, then the chances of people believing you're together are lower.

Going behind the scenes

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

Tasking Keanu Reeves with narrating and conducting interviews for a documentary almost seems like a challenge to audiences predisposed to questioning the actor's intelligence. As if "Side by Side" director Christopher Kenneally wants to ask us, "Oh, really? What makes you so smart?"

This fast-paced doc about the movie industry's transition from using film to digital technology contains an impressive range of interview subjects with more than enough authority to speak as experts.

Big-time filmmakers such as George Lucas and Steven Soderbergh (who loves digital) and

Side by Side NR

Christopher Nolan (who vastly prefers film), as well as countless editors, cinematographers, colorists and producers, comment on the ways in which the digital format has changed movie-making, both allowing for more flexibility and imagination while sacrificing handmade magic and possibly diminishing the so-called reality of images captured on film.

"Side By Side" engages in such a rapid debate that it loses track of audiences and critics, the people who watch and discuss the films. Outside of David Fincher noting that digital advancements will never get in the way of good storytelling, Kenneally neglects to discuss how the digital landscape has adjusted which movies are being made/financed and what that says about film culture as a whole.

That said, "Side By Side" taps into the notion of art as shaped by technology, both in the increasing ability for amateurs to make movies and pros to expand their palette. Robert Rodriguez notes that he never would have been able to make "Sin City" without digital capabilities. Lana and Andy Wachowski embrace the changing medium, though their "Speed Racer" certainly represents the epitome of style over substance.

Some viewers may have greater interest in the anecdotes, such as when Fincher talks about Robert Downey Jr. leaving mason jars of urine around the set of "Zodiac" to protest the way shooting on digital results in much longer work days. Even if its scope opens it up to unasked questions, "Side By Side" delights in bringing us all onto the movie set, into the editing room and behind the camera—thrilling places in any format.

3 Q'S FOR KEANU REEVES

Reuters

Keanu Reeves co-produced and conducted the interviews for the 98-minute documentary "Side By Side," opening Friday.

The film features interviews with 70 top filmmakers. Did anyone turn you down?

We got nearly everyone we wanted, although of course some people were unavailable or didn't want to be interviewed, for whatever reason.

You also managed to get "Matrix" directors, the Wachowskis.

I felt honored that they wanted to be a part of this. And I think they add so much to this documentary and may surprise a lot of people with their views. Although they pioneered so many digital techniques in the "Matrix" films, they have this big love for film and the look of film.

Having made the documentary, how do you feel about the future of physical film? Is it dead?

I think it is. Even Chris Nolan admits that film, if not dead, is now on life support, and it's just going to become more and more difficult to even get film. Personally I'm a big film fan and it's sad to see it go but the future is digital.

Brit Marling and Richard Gere in 'Arbitrage'

MCT

'Arbitrage' a tale of money, corruption

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais@tribune.com
» @mattpais

Frustration toward the invincibility of the rich drives "Arbitrage," a corporate and legal thriller that generates some powerful exchanges between familiar players. The big spender facing big trouble is financial exec Robert Miller (Richard Gere), who neglects responsibility and internal bleeding after a tragic incident involving his mistress (French model Laetitia Casta)—not long after she inevitably comments, "You're never going to leave her."

Robert wants to stay one step ahead of the cops until he can finalize the sale of his company. Delays of the sale only leave more time for Robert's daughter and corporate partner, Brooke (Winnetka-bred Brit Marling), to investigate questionable numbers on very important spreadsheets. Dad's internal bleeding may exist professionally as well as personally.

Last year, "Margin Call" identified how high-ranking execs might lose perspective on huge sums of money until their books get out of hand. Last month, the tremendous Ruthlessly pursuing a billionaire he's sure deserves to be punished, detective Bryer (Tim Roth) laments, "He does not get to walk just because he's on CNBC."

Arbitrage

documentary "The Queen of Versailles" found unexpected vulnerability in a real-life couple undone by overindulging in their own success. "Arbitrage" doesn't exactly find new ground through Robert, who spends negligible time with his wife (Susan Sarandon) and puts Jimmy (Nate Parker of "Red Lights"), the son of his former driver, in a precarious position both because Robert trusts Jimmy more than his own son and because Robert ultimately doesn't care as much if something bad happens to a non-family member.

Initially suggesting a cautionary tale about the futility of running from problems, writer-director Nicholas Jarecki turns "Arbitrage" into a character study of an arrogant jerk who suffers the more he believes his own deceptions. The acting's just right, particularly Parker and Gere, who nails the movie's best scene as Robert finally sticks it to the man responsible for the pending merger's slowness.

Yet the possible presence of false evidence clouds a movie that needs more grit and discovery. The depiction of money as the ultimate motivator should also inspire most viewers to mutter, "What else is new?"

The billion-dollar box-office club

Only a handful of movies qualify for membership in the exclusive club of films that have taken in more than $1 billion in worldwide box office—and only two have made more than $2 billion, both of them from director James Cameron. With his “Titanic” finally coming out on Blu-ray this week, it’s time to take a look at the other members of the billion-dollar box-office club. Here are the Top 6; you’ll find the rest of the 13 films at redeyechicago.com.

Avatar
2009; $2.78 billion
The first of the two titles that make James Cameron the undisputed boss of the billion-dollar club, “Avatar” came out in 2009 and broke records worldwide.

Titanic
1997; $2.18 billion
Rumored to be wildly over-budget and expected to sink at the box office, Cameron’s “Titanic” turned into a juggernaut, taking top dollar and top prizes at the Oscars.

The Avengers
2012; $1.5 billion
“The Avengers” is the latest member of the billion-dollar box-office club. The summer smash united the Marvel heroes of blockbusters past. The combination was box office gold.

Harry Potter & the Deathly Hallows—Part 2
2011; $1.33 billion
The final installment of the adventures of the boy wizard made magic.

Transformers: Dark of the Moon
2011; $1.12 billion
Audiences turned out big for the first two “Transformers” movies in 2007 and 2009, but went supernova for the third iteration in 2011.

The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King
2003; $1.12 billion
The first two installments of director Peter Jackson’s “LOTR” trilogy were hits, but the third was mega-successful.

NEW ON DVD

For Greater Glory
Andy Garcia stars in this story of a Mexican war over religious freedom. Director Dean Wright faced a major hurdle in putting together his epic feature. It wasn't enough that he had to create interesting characters to carry moviegoers through the story of Mexico's Cristero War of the 1920s; he also realized many moviegoers will have no knowledge of this conflict. Wright had to provide enough explanation for the film to be understood, but not so much that he bored those already aware of this dark period. In general, he succeeds. Wright uses a structure that looks at three very different characters linked by a deep need to right government wrongs.

Extras: "The True Story of the Cristeros" featurette, trailers.

Titanic
James Cameron's "Titanic" is second only to his "Avatar" in U.S. and worldwide box-office returns, and fifth all-time even when you adjust for inflation, according to Box Office Mojo. The romantic drama made its Blu-ray debut in several packages: a four-disc set with the film on 3-D Blu-ray and 2-D Blu-ray; a four-disc set with the 2-D Blu-ray and standard DVD; and a two-disc, standard DVD set. The Blu-ray looks amazing. At times it looked as if every drop of water was individually defined. To be sure, Cameron's storytelling has its considerable weakness, and effects from 1997 sometimes look artificial in more recent high-definition presentation, including in some of the movie's big ship-sinking moments. But I am hard-pressed to go back to basic DVD after seeing this on Blu-ray.

Extras: "Final word" and "Reflections on Titanic" featurettes, digital copy. Standard DVD's only extras are deleted scenes. RICH HELDENFELS, AKRON BEACON JOURNAL

What to Expect When You're Expecting

Four women deal with how their lives will change because of motherhood. Cameron Diaz stars. Their stories meander and occasionally bump into one another. Director Kirk Jones is like a one-armed juggler. He can't seem to figure out how to get a scene started, then he lets everything come to a crashing end. He never finds the kind of rhythm necessary to keep so many story lines going.

Extras: "The Dudes Unscrewed" and "What to Expect and the Pregnancy Bible" featurettes, deleted scenes, digital copy.

RICK BENTLEY, THE FRESNO BEE

Snow White and the Huntsman

Kristen Stewart and Chris Hemsworth star in this dark version of the classic fairy tale. The latest grim look at a Grimm story features the ever-dour Stewart and the charismatic Hemsworth. Just like in the fairy tale of yore, it's the Wicked Queen (Charlize Theron) who steals the show. Director Rupert Sanders loads this very dark version with all the traditional elements: a talking mirror that strokes egos like a Hollywood agent, a group of vertically challenged heroes, the powerful effects of a true love's kiss and the battle between the Wicked Queen and Snow White.

Extras: "A New Legend Is Born" featurette, profiles of the characters and audio commentary. Blu-ray combo has digital copy extended version, making-of featurettes "Reinventing the Fairy Tale," "Citizens of the Kingdom," special effects, a set tour and a second-screen interactive feature. 'Finding Nemo'

Classic movie, not-so-great 3-D

Newsday

The Oscar-winning animated feature "Finding Nemo" doesn't need to fish for compliments: Newly re-released in 3-D, the 9-year-old Disney/Pixar marvel about a single-father clown fish searching for his son is a welcome sight on the big screen, where you can feel the undiminished immensity of the ocean and the bulk of a whale in a way TV can't touch.

That alone could be reason to take the tykes, even without the third dimension or the gem of a new "Toy Story" short, "Partysaurus Rex." And a parent may not even have much choice in the matter, once his or her kid gets wind of all this and begs to go. But since mom and dad are still the ones paying the premium for 3-D, is it worth the trip?

The story itself and the vocal performances argue for yes. Albert Brooks makes the frantic dad's anguished desperation visceral in a way kids may not appreciate but remains a gut-punch to parents. Ellen DeGeneres as the dotty sidekick he acquires after a diver captures his son, Nemo (Alexander Gould), gives seemingly offhand comments emotional soul.

Finding Nemo 3-D G

3D

Would that the 3-D were up to this sterling level. The slight murkiness endemic to much 3-D isn't a problem with the ocean scenes, where most of the film takes place. But those are precisely the scenes in which the movie's lovely, shaded palette often becomes solarized—burned and overexposed-looking. Removing the 3-D glasses reveals perfectly smooth colors on-screen, so there's the culprit.

Meanwhile, showing before "Nemo" is that marvelous 6 1/2-minute "Toy Story" short. The nervous T. rex, Rex (Wallace Shawn), learns that while he may be a party pooper with his friends, he's a party animal with the bathtub toys of young Bonnie, the little girl at the end of "Toy Story 3." Briskly suspenseful, this third "Toy Story Toons" makes you hope Disney will put a "Toy Story 4" on track.

Rhona Mitra seeks tough realness in role

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

■ cwagner@tribune.com
■ @showpatrol

When Rhona Mitra signed on to star in the new season of "Strike Back," she wanted to achieve one goal above all others.

"The key thing of this show is that they're praised for the legitimacy and authenticity of both Phil and Sully's approach to their characters, so the pressure that I felt that I wasn't dropping the ball or lowering the bar was considerable," she told me at San Diego Comic Con in July. "I wanted to make sure that I was keeping a certain standard in the credibility that was already set. I couldn't mess up on that."

Mitra plays Major Rachel Dalton, an MI-6 spy who at the beginning of the season boldly pushed her way into the special ops division Section 20 not as a new agent, but as the boss who oversees, among others, the main operatives Stonebridge (Philip Winchester) and Scott (Sullivan Stapleton). Mitra, who has starred as butt-kicking women in such films as "Underworld: Rise of the Lycans" and "Doomsday," as well as stints on TV's "SGU" and "The Gates," easily handles the role of a tough taskmaster and expert covert agent.

Mitra's desire to look like the real deal while in battle mode was a tall order, considering the whirlwind filming schedule in South Africa and other African locations.

"We had an incredibly brief amount of time to get everything together as far as training was concerned," she said. "It was a baptism by fire, for sure."

The show's military advisers—some are British, some American and some South African—worked with Mitra on the various techniques used for different weapons. Dalton, a Brit, would have learned how to use the AK-47 she brandished in the season premiere while undercover in Africa, Mitra said, because it's not used by the British military. Later she used an MP-5, which is a British military-issue weapon and required a different style and stance for shooting.

During the "Strike Back" panel at Comic Con, Mitra said she was "a pacifist by nature." Playing a character that sometimes kills for a living meant she had to find mental tricks "so my karma wasn't altered too hugely," she told me. When she had to discharge a bazooka as Dalton, she imagined the weapon fired something other than explosive shells.

"If I was really doing the damage [the character] was doing I wouldn't be a happy camper," she said, then chuckled. "So I imagined there were giant cupcakes coming out of it."

Boardwalk Empire
8 p.m.
Sunday
HBO

Many fans of HBO's "Boardwalk Empire" feared the show's tension would fizzle after the shocking finale of Season 2.

Just in case you haven't seen Season 2 of the Prohibition-era gangster tale, spoiler ahead! Atlantic City bootleg king Nucky Thompson (Steve Buscemi) put a couple of slugs into his surrogate son, Jimmy Darmody (Michael Pitt), after learning Jimmy was conspiring to steal his criminal enterprise. So how does a drama move on after killing off its main antagonist? Series creator Terence Winter simply added someone even more trigger-happy and nasty.

Enter Brooklyn gangster Gyp Rosetti (Bobby Cannavale), who doesn't like Nucky's plan to partner exclusively with New York mobster Arnold Rothstein (Michael Stuhlbarg). Gyp immediately shows that he's not someone you should cross. Cannavale is at his sinister best here. Gyp seethes with unbridled rage, but under the surface is the almost childlike insecurity of a school-age bully.

"Gyp Rosetti is trouble for everyone, which makes him bad for business," Nucky says. But he's good for Nucky, and Buscemi, who puts to rest any complaints that he isn't believable as a ruthless gangster in the season premiere. He's absolutely harrowing and cold-hearted as Nucky orders the execution of a low-level employee.

The new season begins 18 months after Nucky offed Jimmy, with Nucky fighting to keep his seat as the undisputed boss of the Atlantic City rackets. He and his wife, Margaret (Kelly Macdonald), aren't getting along, but they throw a King Tut-themed party (Tut's tomb was discovered in November 1922) to ring in 1923 and, incidentally, the Roaring '20s. The party scenes, like the rest of the series, glitter with period detail. The rest of the opener is excellent, too, as it fills us in on what's happening with the show's many other characters. (If I had to make a complaint about the series, it's that there are a lot of characters.)

Another new cast member, however, could steal the show—and not in the same way Cannavale does. Former Chicagoan Meg Chambers Steedle plays Broadway showgirl Billie Kent, who roars into Nucky's life. Steedle's likely to wow as much as this new season of "Boardwalk Empire" does.

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Google has finally realized what we've been missing all these years. The technological overlord this week revealed the "Bacon number" search option. Type in any actor's name—sorry, they have to have been in a movie or TV show—followed by "bacon number" and bam! You're within six degrees of Kevin Bacon. Time to waste a few hours checking how some famous faces stack up ...

Mommy dearest

DMX let it all out in an interview this week that touched on his troubled relationship with his mother. "Any man, it doesn't matter how hard, how tough you are, you need to be someone's baby," he told MTV. "That's necessary, and anyone who thinks other than that, they're fooling themselves. I just wanted to use that word genuinely. I just wanted to be able to say, 'Mommy, I love you.'"

—Kristen Cavallari, tweeting Thursday about the news that Vanessa Minnillo and Nick Lachey have become parents of Camden John. "By the way that wasn't a bitchy tweet at all," Cavallari later clarified. Cavallari, of course, recently had her first son, Camden Jack, with Jay Cutler.
